TABLET IN HONOR

OF BANCROFT.

Granite Block Put to Mark the Site of the Home of the Famous

REPUBLIC SPECIAL

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 20 .- A tablet of conze on a granite cube, marking the site of the century-old home of George Bancroft, America's most famous historian, was unveiled in Worcester on the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. Simple, but hearty, incidents marked the ceremony Admirai Sampson was there, the guest of the city, and the orators were General James Grant Wilson of New York, a lifelong friend of Pancroft, and the Reverend Doctor Edward Everett Hale of Boston.

The old house had been razed, and, near at hand, is the newer home of Frederick H. Daniels. It was in front of this that the American fing was pulled from the little monument the words on the tablet finshed in the autumn sun:

"Twenty feet east of this stone stood the house in which George Rancroft, historian of America, son of Aaron and Lucretia (Chandler) Bancroft, was born, Catober 3, 1809. Placed by citizens of Worcester, October 3, 1909. America's most famous historian, was un-

ANGER LED TO SUICIDE. Young Girl Grieved Over Reproof

From Older Sister.

New York, Oct. 19.-Because an elder sister reproved her for having a gentleman caller Bessie Murray, aged 17, swallowed carbolic acid Monday and died. The girl lived with her sister, Kate Murray, who conducts a boarding-house near Wood-bourne. Sunday evening a gentleman called

The next morning Kate Murray reproved her sister for her conduct. Her words deeply grieved the young girl, and she determined to kill herself. Carbolic acid was in the house, and, procuring this, the girl went to her own apartments and drank the contents of a full bottle.

Her cries for water as she lay prostrated upon the floor of her room attracted the attention of her sister. A physician was summoned, but before his arrival Bessie Murray was dead.

Mr. Dooley Surprised Kipling.

Mr. Kipling was explaining a while ago to an interested visitor from America how quickness and intelligence of observation and a kind of instinctive insight, sometimes enables the foreigner to know, in a short time, more of one's country than one does oneself. He pointed the remark by a reference to Mr. Peter Dunne's visit to and anecdote and observation were exchanged.

"Here was Dunne," declares Mr. Kipling,
"In London for only a short time, and already he knew the London bus driverknew him, mind you, and he's a most curlous type and most characteristic-knew him better than most Londoners I have ever met."

The tribute to "Mr. Doolsy's" acumen and penetrating observation was well deserved; how well deserved Mr. Kipling does not know. Mr. Dunne does know the London bus driver. But if any one in Chicago will catch Mr. Dunne during a moment of leisure and ask him how many times he rode on top of an omnibus, Mr. Dunne will be forced to admit that it was just once.—Saturday Evening Post.

FLOWERS THAT NEVER FADE.

Western Naturalist Says That He Can Preserve Both Bloom and Fragrance.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 29 .- A way to preserve flowers and plants so that fragrance, freshness and coloring will be retained many years has been discovered by a mac-uralist of some note, who for several years oast his made his home in Portland. In proof of his claim that he can do what ne says, he exhibits flowers which he nas kept more than four years, and which how show as rich colors and smell as sweetly as when they were taken from their moun-tain home.

tain home.
The discoverer says that, although his show as rich colors and shell as when they were taken from their mountain home.

The discoverer says that, although his discovery was made more than four years ago, he has not yet perfected it to such an extent that it may be utilized by the uninitiated. He hopes, however, soon to bring it to a point which will insure its general use.

The theory upon which the naturalist worked is that all plants are covered with myriads of small insects, which live upon them and feed upon them; that these insects are so small that they can scarcely be seen with the aid of a microscope, yet they are known to be there; that if these insects can be killed without destroying the color of the plant, or the fragrance of the flower, there is no reason why the plant cannot be preserved for all time to came. This theory is one propounded by the naturalist himself, and he believes it is the sorrect ore, and that it has been so demonstrated by his experiments.

He tells of his discovery and his mode of preserving plants and flowers as follows:

"I have always been interested in nature, that being my life work, and upon my return from a trip taking in the mountains of Southern Oregon I was handling a species of white flower I had obtained, it being my desire to preserve the blossoms if possible. I placed some of the flowers in boiling vater and afterwards hald them out for dry. Examining them some time later, I found that they had not wilted, and this was the first inkling I had of a plan by which flowers might be preserved. Then I began further experiments by placing the flowers in various solutions of bolding water at different temperatures, and in actas, such as sulphurle. Some of the solutions had the effect of burning up the flowers, but others did not hurt them, apparently, and I came to the conclusion that by using certain formulas for certain species of plant life they could be preserved without destroying the foliage or seent, and that at the same time the insect that infested the plant could be killed. Encouraged by my success,

Then he had a dream.

In his vision he saw a brilliantly colored rainbow stretching in a semicircle across the northern skies. One foot of it rested on a certain mountain and from it was pouring a shower of gold greater than Midas ever longed for or Jove poured upon the mortal of whom he was enamored. The dream haunted him all the exat day, and many a time he turned his eyes to the mountain, standing almost inaccessible and covered with snow, a few miles away. But the dream was not strong enough to draw him to the mountain.

It seemed a great deal like imitating the old childish legend of hunting for the pet of gold at the foot of the rainbow, but he had faith in his dream and set out upon the arduous journey to the golden mountain.

The mountain was well-nigh inaccessible, and, although its peak was plainly visible from where he was prospecting, it took three months for him to reach it. But reach it he did, at last, and he began pros-
